Amstar helped achieve a caterpillar-to-butterfly transformation of the offices of global positioning company Navman. The existing warehouse and office space was transformed into a dynamic new open-plan office that reflected the company's hi-tech products.

The new fitout designed by Tony Gracie of Gracie Architecture features a nautical theme with elements reminiscent of a ship's hull, sails and rigging. While much of the interior was stripped, it was decided to accentuate the original industrial look of the warehouse, retaining exposed steel beams and some pre-cast concrete paneling. The concrete floor was polished and ducting, cabling and other services left exposed to create an industrial look.
